Mr. Quinn,

I appreciate you working with my client to get the website data to him.

We still have some work to do it seems. The domain is not located where you have previously provided access. This must be some sort of miscommunication because I believe you are trying to transfer the domain, but it just is not happening. In the meantime, the website is down and my client is losing money.

Now, it is the weekend for me too. I just finished coaching my kids' football game. I would rather not get to work on filing a federal lawsuit on Monday over a technical miscommunication about transferring a domain. That is not a threat--I am just saying I do not want to do that with Saturday and Sunday.

Can you help all of us have a better weekend and transfer the domain? What I understand needs to happen is that you have to go to wherever you would access the domain--that last Wix account did not have it--and unlock the domain. Then, when you receive a request from my client--who is going to use namecheap--you provide a code that lets my client transfer the domain to namecheap. That is it. Then we can all stop watching our emails and enjoy a beautiful Saturday evening.

Can you do that for us?

Buckley

Mr. Quinn,

We are attempting to access the Wix account you provided, but there is a 2FA set up for which we will need the code.

Please provide the code so that we may finish transferring control of the domain.

Warren,

Here is a link to your site files. I cc'd your new lawyer buddy who started last month and his boss, so we all are in the know:
